Production Introduction:

A night guard, also known as a dental mouth guard, occlusal guard, or a bite guard, is an appliance prescribed to patients to treat teeth grinding (bruxism). In general, it protects the teeth and other vital structures by offering a protective barrier between the upper and lower teeth. The difference between the different types of prescription night guards is in the material used.

Product Feature and Application

Soft night guard:The soft night guard may be prescribed for mild cases of night grinding or bruxism. There are patients who do not suffer from the unfortunate habit on a nightly basis. There are also patients whose degree of grinding is not so significant. For these patients, a soft protection is enough to solve the problem and preserve teeth structure. The soft night guard is also well suited for people who suffer from teeth clenching rather than teeth grinding. The soft material cushions some of the clenching force.

Hard Acrylic Night Guard:Designed to protect the dentition, the Hard Night Guard can be worn during the day or at night to provide occlusal comfort. Fabricated for precise fit, and providing maximum rigidity and strength. Not recommended for patients with cosmetic restorations.

Soft/hard night Guard:This night guard is processed with normal hard acrylic on the occlusal surface and a soft thermoplastic that is bonded to the inside. It is very comfortable with good retention and therefore patient compliance is very high.
